But friends ye must pardon this here disgression and I'll proceed to my lectur for I jest caikilated it mought be the meens of preventin sum of ye here present from doin the same. Wall my at friends to proceed; in the fust place, as the hearts blow for the Millrace so doz I blow for hum. I am far away from that ar blessid place. I am going on through this here orfriendly wurld, by myself (for I haveut got no wife or children,) and I'm bound to go right strate through, and when I do get through I kie say like the poet "Thar's no place like hum." My friends I rather calkilate we all feels jist alike. I mean when we ar fur away from bum, fur ef we hav any feelings of graturtude and love for our parents we will say like the other poet "Thar's whar the old folks stay." An my friends ef we travil all over this bere land of ours or any body else's we will hear people weeping at an cryin, an hollerin and working all day an June 26th. 1858. then when night comes sayin "Thar's no place like hum." I hope ye hav been edifi ie by my lectur and I trust I hav planted in yer minds that most butiful subjick, "Thars no place like hum." must zouse my delaying you so long an I hope next time to lectur upon sam other subjick than this here one I hav jist lectured ou, that is "Thars no place like hum." That subjick is so full of interest that a grate deal more mought be sed but I dont want to weary your pashunce, so I must say in conclusion that I rather calkilate "Thars no place like hum."

Obadiah Pringle, a good Democrat, and a personal friend of Mr. Buchanan writes as follows to the Indianapolis Journal:

"Tell that fool "Foley," if he ever wants to rite another letter to make me his distribitin officer, and I'll transcribe his letters and correct the spellin, and put the matter into form for him.
